Transcriber's Office

January 14, 1998

in a Legislature is to have a bill killed. I'm having all of mine taken care of so you can see the thing you all fear the most holds no terror for me at all. As Sir Thomas More said, when this fellow Cromwell was trying to have things done to him and he was at a hearing, he said, you bring the kind of things that might be terrorist to children, but they bring no fear to me. Sir Thomas More had some good things to say. What all these people are yammering and yapping about my talking on bills failed to remind you all, and you all seem to forget it 'cause you buy it, you were here but you forget it. I didn't talk on every bill. I didn't talk long on every bill that I opposed.

SENATOR CROSBY: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: You all get carried away. Your emotions run off with you. You know what the kamikaze pilot was. The person would fly what they call these human bombs, crash the plane into a ship. I'm not like that. Now the plane might crash into the ship, but I'm going to survive. So you all's ship is the thing...yeah, it's going to sink and there ain't nothing you can do about it. You all have put me in a position now where I'm going after every bill. I've never done that before. And Senator Maurstad is right in what he said earlier. I've had a double mind about some things. Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde were battling for my legislative soul, and at that time Dr. Jekyll would win, and I'd do the right thing. Mr. Hyde has been made considerably stronger by an injection of this elixir that is this thing you all are going to add to the rules. Not only will you enshrine me in the rules, but you free my hand. That inhibitor which used to be on me in the past...

SENATOR CROSBY: Time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...has been nullified. I'm going...are we still under call?

SENATOR CROSBY: Yes, we are.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I'd like us to check in, then I'd want a roll call vote.

SENATOR CROSBY: Would the senators please all check in?
